Official mintages in platinum are almost unknown aside from the famous Russian 3, 6 and 12 Rubles. Private mintages in platinum, many of them of the same general types as various European gold coinages of the mid-19th century and doubtless contemporaneous with those, are occasionally met with; they date from the period when platinum, though a precious metal, was as yet not valued more highly than gold, and most of them were melted up afterward when their bullion value exceeded their face value. Accordingly they are now rare and unusual collectors' items.
